Description

- A REAL GEM -

MOTOR YACHT GAIA has a history of great charm and interest behind it:

is a displacement shuttle built in the late 1950s at the German shipyard Schurenstedt. Originally named Kormoran built for a German shipowner as a pleasure M/Y, later sold to an Italian shipowner and transferred to the Mediterranean.

Over the years, it was acquired again by a Sicilian shipowner who, at the Rodriguez shipyard with the naval architect Biriaco, gave the shuttle its current configuration with the lengthening of the flybridge. The hull remains original to this day.

In the early 2000s, a new Italian owner kept the shuttle until 2008, when it was purchased by the current owner. The shuttle was in a covered storage in Genova Voltri, completely dismantled only with the new engines and generators (0 hours) mounted but not installed and with the supporting structures.

Since 2008, engines and generators have been installed by Cummins of S. Margherita Ligure. The interiors designed by the naval architect Alessio Liuni of Rome were made and assembled by a German carpentry.

In 2010 the shuttle was transferred to the Marina di Genova for the final installations and tests carried out by the Italian RINA. It was later recorded in Vienna.

All the on-board electronics were installed in 2009 and subsequently overhauled
